

cut line

Satellites to Seeds NASA's Deep Roots in Agriculture

Crop health, soil moisture, irrigation, heat waves and severe weather are just some of what NASA satellites and scientists measure in service to American agriculture. Decision-makers use NASA Earth science data to monitor global crop production, mitigate drought, maximize crop yields and inform land stewardship efforts.

NASA wants to partner with you, so we can design our next mission to produce the data you need.

www.nasa.gov

NP-2022-02-3036-HQ